

Johnson & Johnson Campaign for Nursing's Future – AACN Fall 2014 Minority Nurse Faculty Scholars

Doris Addo-Glover, MSN, RN, is a PhD candidate at George Mason University. She received her MSN and BSN from Johns Hopkins University. Her research interest is in maternal obesity and perinatal health. Her goal is to develop evidence-based interventions through research to reduce maternal morbidity and mortality. Doris has an extensive background in program administration, health promotion, clinical and preventive/primary services delivery, community outreach to vulnerable populations, health disparities programming, cultural competency and healthcare provider education. Her clinical experience is in pediatrics, public health, and maternal/child health. She is a proud member of Sigma Theta Tau International, Association of Women's Health, Obstetric and Neonatal Nurses, and Southern Nursing Research Society.

Eboni Harris, MSN, APRN, FNP-BC, is a second-year PhD student attending the University of South Carolina. She received her BSN from the University of South Carolina and her MSN from Clemson University. Since completing her MSN, Eboni has practiced in primary care settings as a Board Certified Family Nurse Practitioner. In 2011, she joined the faculty at the University of South Carolina-Upstate as a full-time instructor coordinating a medical/surgical course. She also serves as a faculty advisor for the Student Nurses Association. Her research interest is to develop culturally tailored interventions addressing obesity in African American women. Eboni hopes to inspire minority students to further their education and give back to their communities.

LaKeetra Josey, MSN, PMHNP-BC, is a third-year pre-doctoral student at the University of Pennsylvania. Until recently she has served as the Associate Program Director of the Psychiatric-Mental Health Nurse Practitioner program at the University of Pennsylvania. She is a practicing Family Psychiatric-Mental Health Nurse Practitioner, and certified as a Master Psychopharmacologist from the Neuroscience Education Institute. Her dissertation research focus is on genetic factors associated with metabolic disturbances in children and adolescents who are prescribed antipsychotic medications. She was awarded the 2013-2014 SAMHSA / ANA Minority Fellowship. LaKeetra has co-authored manuscripts that have been published in mental health journals and was the lead author of a chapter on prescribing for Depressive Disorders in the newly released Manual of Clinical Psychopharmacology for Nurses published by the AMA.

Marie McBee, MSN, RN, is a first-year DNP student at the University of Alabama Birmingham and an instructor of nursing leadership and psychiatric nursing at the University of Texas Health Science Center-Houston. Prior to pursuing her DNP, she worked in various levels of healthcare administration at the local, state, and national levels. While at Delmarva Foundation, as Vice President for Federal Programs, she worked closely with the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services and the National Quality Forum on the implementation of quality measures. Marie was a co-leader for the patient safety coalition in Maryland and Washington, DC and a key contributor to patient safety policy development in Maryland. She is a Board member of the Sigma Theta Tau chapter in Houston and a past member of the Hispanic Nurses Association.

Patrick Muturi, MSN, PMHNP, BA, RN, is a second-year PhD student at Washington State University (WSU) where he also received his BSN and MSN. He started his nursing career at the Seattle VA as a Nurse Technician. As a new BSN graduate, he worked as a floor RN (medical ICU) before moving to become a charge nurse in an inpatient psychiatric unit at the VA hospital in Tacoma. His doctoral program research will explore the lived experiences of spousal abuse in active military personnel post deployment. Patrick's time in the military has sparked his growing interest in mental health issues surrounding active duty personnel who have served in arenas of conflict such as Afghanistan and Iraq. Currently, he serves as a student representative in WSU's diversity committee and in WSU's Admission & Progression committee.
